Something for the Shabbos table

Examining the Jewish calendar gives rise to the following question: Why is the week-long Yom Tov of Sukkos followed by Shemini Atzeres, a short one-day continuance, whereas the week-long holiday of Pesach is not followed by any such brief closing chag? The answer is that Shavuos is really the conclusion of Pesach.

True, we were freed from slavery on Pesach, but that was only a physical freedom. Being free to do whatever we want to do - without any restraints - is not true freedom, for we would remain slaves to our desires. Only when we accepted the Torah on Shavuos and willingly bound ourselves to Hashem and His way of life did we truly become free. Receiving the Torah imbued our lives with direction.

This is what the Gemorah means with the famous dictum: אין אדם חורין אלא מי שעוסק בתורה - A person is not free unless he is involved in the study of Torah. The Torah is our guide to life, and it tells us what is right and wrong. It frees us from the shackles of the evil inclination so that we can now accomplish great things and achieve eternity.

It may not seem easy to accept the Torah, and we may wonder how keeping kosher and Shabbos and all the moral restrictions are in fact "freedom". But if we apply ourselves and delve deeply into understanding the meaning that all of the laws give to our lives and how they perfect us in all aspects of our existence, then we will certainly come to the conclusion that we are free. We will then understand that those who lack direction and feel that they have to follow the crowd are really the true slaves.
