Something for the Shabbos table

The opening Rashi of the Parsha points out that Aharon was down-hearted when he saw the grand korbanos of the princes for the opening of the Mishkan because his tribe did not take part in these. Hashem said to Aharon 'you are greater than them for you light the menorah.' Why was the job of lighting the menorah greater than the princes' korbanos; if anything, the korbanos were more public and with grand ceremony? One suggested answer is that the korbanos were a one-off thing for the dedication of the Mishkan. The job of lighting the menorah is a daily task - and therein lies its importance. The things which we do daily in Avodas Hashem are the things more central to our Jewish lives, these have greater importance. That was Aharon's prize.
