Carrying on Chol Hamoed

The Poskim disagree whether there is a restriction against carrying on Chol Hamoed. The Meiri, writes explicitly that there is no restriction against carrying on Chol Hamoed. The rationale behind this ruling is that carrying is categorized as an inferior melachah and as such it is not significant enough to be included in the melachos that are prohibited on Chol Hamoed. This lenient approach is cited by R' Shlomo Zalman Auerbach.

On the other hand one can infer from Biur Halacha and Chazon Ish that carrying unnecessarily on Chol Hamoed is prohibited. Consequently, when walking in a public domain one would be required to check his pockets to be certain that he is not carrying something that would constitute a violation. Harav Rav Wosner, in Shevet Halevi, brings our Gemara (Moed Katan 13) as proof to the position that carrying is permitted on Chol Hamoed. The Mishnah rules that it is prohibited to move items from a house in one courtyard to a house in another courtyard. The reason, explains Nimukei Yosef, is that carrying items from a house in one courtyard to another involves exertion that is prohibited on Chol Hamoed. Shevet Halevi notes that if carrying on Chol Hamoed was prohibited that should have been cited as the reason for the prohibition; the fact that it was not cited is an indication that carrying is, in fact, not prohibited.

Something for the Shabbos table

At the end of this week's Parsha the Torah deals with the topic of Eglah Arufa. If a corpse is found between two cities and the murderer is unknown, then there is an entire ceremony involving offering a cow in the valley between the cities, with a form of confession verbalised by the elders of the nearest city to the corpse.

What exactly is going on here?

The Ibn Ezra writes that the ceremony is aimed at atoning for the sins of the town nearest to where the corpse was found, for had they been free of sin, such a thing would never have happened in close proximity to them.

The Rambam takes a different and more rational approach. In his Moreh Nevuchim (brought down by the Ramban here), the Rambam writes that this grand ceremony publicises the murder, which should lead to the killer being discovered (since everyone will be talking about it and everyone will be trying to find out who the murderer was).

The Ramban, however, explains that this entire ceremony is a form of korban, and as such comes to achieve certain levels of atonement and closeness to Hashem, with its deeper facets hidden from our understanding and knowledge.
