Insight from the Daf

STRINGS ATTACHED

The Gemorah in Gittin Daf 78 brings the following case; if there is a string attached to the Get and the husband gives the Get to the wife but it is possible for him to pull at the string and bring the Get back she is not divorced.

Tosfos says that if her hand was not clenched when he put the Get into her hands and after the Nesinah (giving over of the Get) she clenched her hand and now he is unable to pull the Get back she is not divorced. Since at the time of the Nesinah he was able to pull it back when she clenched her hand after the Nesinah it is akin to picking the Get off the ground since the act is being done by her, not by him, it is not a Get. If her hand is clenched at the time that the Get is placed in her hand and he stuffs the Get into her hand until the point that it is no longer possible for him to pull it back she is divorced.

Something for the Shabbos table

Although Moshe was the one told by Hashem to instruct Bnei Yisrael to build the Mishkan, nevertheless, he was not in charge of the actual construction. In this week's parsha the Torah informs us that there were two people charged with that mission. The first was Betzalel and the second was Ohaliav. Rashi points out that Ohaliav came from sheivet Dan which was regarded as one of the "lowly" shevatim since Dan was born from Bilha who was a maidservant of Rachel. On the other hand, Betzalel came from sheivet Yehuda which was regarded as one of the greatest shevatim. Despite the difference in their lineages, the Torah equated the two in the construction of the Mishkan.

Rav Wolbe comments that Hashem does not examine a person's ancestry before choosing him for a specific position. The criteria for obtaining the position is the person's ability in the specific task needed to be filled. Ohaliav was the perfect man for the job and therefore he was chosen to work hand in hand with Betzalel who was of a much more prestigious lineage.

The same can be said when it came to those who merited executing the actual construction of the Mishkan and the numerous vessels within. The Torah tells us "Every man whose heart inspired him came, and everyone whose spirit motivated him brought the portion of Hashem for the Mishkan" (i35:21). The Ramban explains that Bnei Yisrael had no one to train them into these highly skilled and detail oriented vocations. Nevertheless, those whose spirit motivated them to join the workforce of constructing an abode for Hashem, found the skills within themselves despite their lack of training.

Once again, the positions were filled not with those who brought the most impressive ancestry, but with those who desired to participate and thereby made themselves truly worthy for the position.
