Daf Insight

The Rema, in the name of Terumas Hadeshen rules that when a person is deserving of banishment (בידוי) it should be pronounced even when there is a concern that the pronouncement will lead the person away from living as a Jew.

The Taz expresses astonishment regarding this halacha. How is it possible to ignore the possibility that someone will leave the path of Judasim altogether? After he quotes the source cited by Terumas Hadeshan and demonstrates that that source does not prove that a person should be banished when it may lead a person to give up his Judasim he cites our Gemara (Kiddushin Daf 20) as proof to the opposite. Abaye demonstrates from a verse that even after a person's sinful ways led him to be sold as a slave, nevertheless, the Torah instructs us to be compassionate towards him and redeem him from slavery. This clearly demonstrates that one must exercise caution at the possibility of one who may abandon his Judaism. Furthermore, if the Torah instructs us to redeem someone who is already attending to idols certainly one must be compassionate and exercise concern for a person who has not yet reached that stage.

Something for the Shabbos table

The Torah in this week's parsha tells us 'Wine and other intoxication beverages you (the kohanim who are doing the Avodah) shall not drink'

The Medrash warns against the harm of alcohol 'if a person drinks too much wine, he will end up selling all that he owns to keep up his addiction to drinking'.

The Medrash then relates the story of a man who spent so much money on his habit of drinking that his children were worried they would soon be penniless. When he was drunk, they tied him up and took him out to a cemetery. They hoped that when he became sober he would be shocked to find himself in in the cemetery and would become aware of the dangers of drinking to excess. That day a caravan carrying vats of wine passed near the cemetery. The caravan was attacked and traveled as fast as it could. One of the large barrels it was carrying fell off and landed right next to the head of the drunk man. When he awoke from his drunken sleep, he was surprised to find the faucet of the barrel right next to his face and kept drinking right there in the cemetery. In a letter to his father, Rav Dessler (Michtav Eliyohu Vol 3, P319-320)) commented that we see from this the principal that Hashem leads a person in a way he wants to go. The events that let the person to find wine in the cemetery were so unusual that they were almost miraculous.

If this is so when a person wants to do something that is improper, all the more so is it true when a person has a strong will to do what is good.
