Tisha B'av (Nidche) that falls on Sunday

The fast begins at 5:42pm, since it is still Shabbos one does not remove ones shoes or sit on the floor. At the conclusion of Shabbos (6:25pm), one should say Baruch Hamavdil and remove ones shoes.

Havdalah

We do not make havdalah on a cup of wine on Motzei Shabbos; this is postponed until Sunday night. However, we still say אתה חוננתנו in our Shemoneh Esrei or at the very least Boruch Hamavdil before one does any melacha. The Brocha of borei meorei h'aish is made.

Someone who is a חולה and is not fasting should make havdalah before they eat. If this is a woman there are a number of different customs as to what she does. Some say she makes the brocha and gives the wine to a child (between 6-9 years old), others say she can drink it herself (there are different views in regards to whether she should use other beverages, rather than wine. Many are lenient that she can use grape juice). There is also an opinion that if her husband is around he can make havdalah for her even though he doesn't drink.

Activities that are permitted on Sunday night

Since the Taanis is nidche, one is permitted to take a haircut, shave, wash clothing, bathe or recite שהחינו. However the prohibition of eating meat, drinking wine (except for Havdalah) and listening to music (there are different opinions) remain in effect until the next morning.

Something for the Shabbos table

In his sefer 'pirkei machshava,' Rabbi Tauber writes extensively about the role of tragedy. Chazal relate that when the Romans were killing the great holy 10 martyrs, the angels shouted at Hashem 'is this what the reward for [their study of] Torah is!' and Hashem responded that 'if the angels are quiet, fine, but if they continue then I will destroy the world.' It seems Hashem had no response; were the angels right? Ray Pinkus explains that Hashem was saying here that the world deserves destruction, and the way to save it is to have a time of tragedy which will serve as a means for the Jews to cry tears to Hashem in each generation for these holy martyrs. Thus, Hashem was telling the angels that 'if you continue with your claims and want to get your way and stop these murders, then the world will end up being destroyed; only if you are silent and let this go then it is through this tragedy that future generations will cry out to Me and allow the world to continue.'

This is THE idea of tragedy/sadness; it is so that a Jew who seems like he is completely in the dark and despite that cries out and forges a connection with Hashem - to hang on and show commitment; this is only an opportunity in tragedy and tests. 'V'emunascha baleilos' - true Emunah is forged when one can hold on to Hashem in the dark.

This is why Tisha B'Av is called a 'mo'ed,' a name normally reserved for festivals, because mo'ed means 'meeting' - and on Tisha B'Av we do meet with Hashem even in our time of darkness and tragedy; this is the greatest expression of our commitment to Him.
