Halacha Corner

Removing Tags from Clothing

The Shulchan Aruch (OC 317:3) writes that one mustn't open a knot that ties new clothing together. The Rema brings an opinion that concurs with the Shulchan Aruch, writing that one mustn't, therefore, open temporary stitching tying clothes together, etc. He then writes that there are those who allow opening temporary stitching providing one doesn't do so in front of one ignorant of hilchos Shabbos. The Taz (317:7) defines a temporary stitch as one that was supposed to be undone within twenty-four hours. The Levush (OC 317:3), however, writes that even if the cleaners tied it knowing that their customers wouldn't open it for a while, that is still considered to be temporary.

The Mishna Berura (317:21) writes that while the halacha follows the Levush, some follow the Taz. Nonetheless the Aruch Hashulchan and R' Shlomo Zalman Auerbach (Shemiras Shabbos Kehilchasa 9:n55) maintain that we follow the Levush.

Following this, R' Yehoshua Neuwirth (SSK 15:63) writes that if one forgot to separate a new pair of socks or gloves, one may cut through the string that attaches them on Shabbos, providing that one destroys the string by doing so. R' Ribiat (The 39 Melochos p828) adds that if necessary, one may even use scissors to cut the tag.

In conclusion, if one forgot to cut one's tags off before Shabbos, one may do so on Shabbos.

Something for the Shabbos table

This week's Parsha contains the first paragraph of the Shema. In it (6:6) we are commanded that 'these words that I command you shall be ON your hearts' (al levavecha); a phrase on which the Shem Mishmuel asks; why does Moshe tell us that these words should reside on our hearts - surely the more appropriate home for them should be IN our hearts, representing our having fully internalised and worked upon these words and concepts. How are we to understand this command of on your hearts? The Shem Mishmuel answers that for sure the best place for these crucial words is in our hearts, for the reasons outlined above. But Moshe is telling us that if we are not on the level that these words can make it into our hearts and really become part of us, then at least they should remain floating and hovering above our hearts as opposed to being rejected and repelled completely. That way when the time comes that we can find room for these words and concepts in our heart, they will simply seep in naturally; for they have always been there or thereabout waiting to come into our hearts.
