Question:

During Shabbos or Yom Tov kitchen floor gets dirty from shoes. We just spent an hour cleaning it before Shabbos Ichvod Shabbos.

Is there a preferred way to clean a tile floor when it gets dirty on Shabbos? Water spray and wipe with paper towel?

Answer:

According to most poskim, it is permitted to spot clean by pouring water on that specific spot, and then wipe it up in a permitted way. Using a paper towel for this is a good idea, because we are not afraid that you might come to squeeze it, since it is not useable after it is wet. Understandably the paper towel may not be deliberately squeezed.

Something for the Shabbos table

The second half of this week's parsha deals with numerous laws that pertain to a fellow Jew who becomes impoverished. If you lend him money, "Do not take from him interest." If he sells himself to you as a slave, "You shall not work him with slave labour." If the situation is such that he sells himself as a slave to a Non-Jew, we must make an effort to extract him from his undesirable environment. As the Torah instructs us, "He shall have redemption; one of his brothers shall redeem him" (Vayikra 25:36, 39, 48). The final two pesukim in the parsha seem to be totally out of place. There the Torah commands us not to make idols or put up statues and it exhorts us to observe Shabbos. What do these mitzvos have anything to do with what was mentioned beforehand? Rashi explains (26:1) that these commandments are specifically directed to the Jew who sells himself to the gentile. When this slave observes his master's behaviour, he should not look to imitate him. He should not say, "Since my master engages in forbidden relationships, so will I. Since my master worships idols, so will I. Since my master desecrates the Shabbos, so will I." The Torah wrote a condensed book of the most basic prohibitions tailored specially for the Jew that finds himself in spiritually challenged circumstances. Rav Wolbe comments that the Torah does not give up on anybody. A Jew can never reach a situation of total spiritual despair. His situation could be so bleak that he even sold himself to chop wood and draw water for a house of idol worship (see Rashi 25:47). Nevertheless, the Torah reaches out to him with a "Kitzur Shulchan Aruch" exhorting him to keep at least the basic tenets of Judaism
